

Is Indian Cricket at their way of Revolution?

The unbeaten despoilment of Indian cricket at ICC knock-outs may certainly give a way to cover all the bases of Revolution

It's a perfect time for revolution. That is the thought, isn't it, however brief. Well, after an acrimonious defeat for the second consecutive time in WTC final, the later one obviously with Australia, I am not flabbergasted at all, are you? Now, some of you might rightfully give me the loggerheads, but, for one, the Indian Cricket must be.

While Rahane and Thakur attempted to tad some venomous against the ultra-destructive Australian bowling attack, however, they all went pear shaped. Australia, once again, pulled up the heist on serving their own legacy and played the game as they are acclimated to. No wonder, India was spectacular at tuning the beats in the WTC journey, their Angst once again diligently came their way at the ICC knock-out. No wonder, they whisked-off the Aussies top three batters to kick-off the game, but all went in vain when their nerves started shivering.

India's pedigree, including, Kohli, Rohit and Pujara who'd became their harshest critic for a past decade or so, have had not scoring enough runs lately. For the ones, who more like to go by numbers, Kohli has an average of 32.13 in 30-odd innings he played in WTC pathway. Pujara, who got another lease of life maintained a daunting average of 32, while Rohit, the captain, scored at 42.11. Well, the averages don't give the justice to their flattering ability to this game of Cricket.

If you are more stat-makers, none of them had amassed the thousand runs landmark during this time. Perhaps, they let their hairs down for head-turning performances in the years so long, or might be, the opponents identified the chinks in their armour at the knock-out games, but you can't sit on your laurels when your team needs to produce the rapid cameos.

Leaving the metaphors behind, it's ideal tipping point to do the revolutionary measures. Just like, your benign cult MS Dhoni did, a way back 15 years down the line. Do you think that selectors have that calibre to break the pedigree and nurture the young-dynamos, maybe not, isn't, but they have to.

Dhoni affably resolved the era of subduing while fabricating the newcomers led him to spin-off the heights of this game. India, under his leadership, plundered all formats of ICC events. Well, that's the reputation he has carried away which you see as a pure love when he faces, for anyone, a single delivery in the IPL down under. If I jog your memory a bit, India didn't able to spring the heal even through the league stages under 50-over world cup back in 2007. That, for sure, construed as a stumbling time when you witness that how revolutions are come.

The cricket mandarins, aftermath, hobbled off their hands to a staggering decision and constructed the team of young bloods for the inaugural season of T20 world cup where India lift that in starring fashion. In a similar notch, Dhoni forked in the road when India reeled off the test clean sweep again England and Australia at their respective soils. He took some bold steps and broken the pedigree with inclusion of young talent into the side which eventually proved stargazing in all material respects.

So, what does it all meant to say? The world cup 2023 is round the corner, and Indian rivals are on their full swing. Can India again hail the same they did 12 years ago? Yes, for sure. But, to turn that out, they must have a few barnstormers in their cauldron to add a T20 flavour. It wouldn't be jarring for somebody like England to go above the weight their opponents carry and stripping off the 400 or 425 runs mark. No wonder, they can.

As a cheeky gesture, India needs the contenders who could herculean the similar way, as others. Its not like that to erect the complete fortress, rather, its just to refurbish a few parts of the building which would eventually shoot out the guns at the forthcoming world cup and the years to come, for that matter.

There have been a few supernova batters evolved as IPL awards, Yashasvi Jaiswal, Rituraj Gaikwad, Rinku Singh, Suryakumar Yadav, to include a few. Everyone, of course those named, had the tattering strike rates of somewhere around 150 or more. They could, probably if given a hand on, can hone their repertoire with unflinching commitment and show the world that how this beautiful game of cricket is going to be played in years to come.

So much so that, selectors, and BCCI may intertwine to exploit their agitation for India to cross their ship of Angst for ICC events where young adrenaline would constitute as a heightened fuel.
